8.0 ADEA Introductory Instruction

Model

In this case the Plaintiff _____ has made a claim under the Federal Civil Rights statute that prohibits age discrimination against [an employee] [an applicant for employment], if that person is 40 years of age or older. This statute is known as the Age Discrimination in Employment Act or “ADEA.”

Specifically, [plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was [denied employment] [describe the employment action at issue] by the defendant _____ because of [plaintiff's] age.

[Defendant] denies that [plaintiff] was discriminated against because of [his/her] age. Further, [defendant] asserts that [describe any affirmative defenses].

I will now instruct you more fully on the issues you must address in this case.

Comment

Referring to the parties by their names, rather than solely as “Plaintiff” and “Defendant,” can improve jurors’ comprehension. In these instructions, bracketed references to “[plaintiff]” or “[defendant]” indicate places where the name of the party should be inserted.

Neither Title VII nor Section 1981 prohibits employers from discriminating on grounds of age. In the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, however, Congress provided protection for employees over the age of 40 who are the victims of discrimination because of age. The central provision of the ADEA is 29 U.S.C. § 623, which provides in part as follows:

§ 623. Prohibition of age discrimination

(a) Employer practices. It shall be unlawful for an employer--

(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's age;

(2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's age; or

(3) to reduce the wage rate of any employee in order to comply with this Act.

1           In Hill v. Borough of Kutztown, 455 F.3d 225, 247 (3d Cir. 2006), the Third Circuit set forth
2 the basic elements of an ADEA claim as follows:

3           To state a claim for age discrimination under the ADEA, a plaintiff must allege that 4 (1) he is over forty, (2) he is qualified for the position in question, (3) he suffered from an 5 adverse employment decision, and (4) his replacement was sufficiently younger to permit a 6 reasonable inference of age discrimination.

7           The Hill court found that these standards were met where the 42-year-old plaintiff alleged that he 8 was constructively discharged from his job, for which he was qualified, and replaced by a person
9 who was 27. The court noted that “[c]onstructive discharge is an adverse employment decision that 10 may form the basis of an ADEA claim.” Id. at 247 n. 32.

11           Relationship Between the Coverage of the ADEA and Title VII

12           The ADEA is patterned after Title VII, with the exception of the provisions on damages, 13 which are patterned after the Fair Labor Standards Act. In some instances the legal standards for 14 determining discrimination under the ADEA are the same as those applicable to Title VII. For 15 example, in Thurston v. TWA, 469 U.S. 111, 121 (1985), the Court applied Title VII precedent to 16 conclude in an ADEA case that an employer may not apportion a benefit in a discriminatory way
17 even if it could have withheld the benefit in question altogether; the Thurston Court stated that this 18 principle “applies with equal force in the context of age discrimination, for the substantive
19 provisions of the ADEA ‘were derived in haec verba from Title VII.’ Lorillard v. Pons, supra, [434
20 U.S. 575] at 584 [1978].” The Thurston Court also noted that “[s]everal Courts of Appeals have 21 recognized the similarity between the two statutes. In Hodgson v. First Federal Savings & Loan
22 Assn., 455 F.2d 818, 820 (1972), for example, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth
23 Circuit stated that with ‘a few minor exceptions the prohibitions of [the ADEA] are in terms
24 identical to those of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.’”

25           Prior to June 2009 a number of courts had applied Title VII’s distinction between pretext and 26 mixed-motive cases to the ADEA context. For instance, in Massarsky v. General Motors Corp., 706
27 F.2d 111, 116-17 (3d Cir. 1983), the Third Circuit noted that “because in many respects the 28 provisions of the ADEA parallel those of Title VII, many courts have adapted to issues of age
29 discrimination the principles of law applicable to cases arising under Title VII of the Civil Rights
30 Act.” The Court in Massarsky held that the delineation between “mixed motive” and “pretext 31 cases”—also known as a delineation between “direct” and “indirect” evidence of discrimination—
32 that had been developed under Title VII, was also applicable to ADEA claims. See also Miller v.
33 Cigna Corp., 47 F.3d 586 (3d Cir. 1995) (en banc) (confirming that the “mixed motive”/“pretext”
34 dichotomy found in Title VII disparate treatment cases is also applicable in ADEA disparate 35 treatment cases); DiBiase v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 48 F.3d 719, 725 n.5 (3d Cir. 1995) (“We 36 generally rely on both ADEA cases and cases arising under Title VII . . . because Title VII and the 37 ADEA have been given parallel constructions due to their similarities in purpose and structure.”).
38 But in Gross v. FBL Financial Services, Inc., 129 S. Ct. 2343 (2009), the Supreme Court rejected
39 the use of the Title VII mixed-motive framework for ADEA cases. Thus, unlike Chapter 5 – which

1 provides separate instructions for “pretext” cases and “mixed-motive” cases – Chapter 8 provides
2 only one instruction for disparate treatment, because in all ADEA cases the plaintiff always retains 3 the burden to prove that age discrimination was the but-for cause of the adverse employment action.
4 See Comment 8.1.1.

5 There are a number of other important differences in the legal standards of ADEA and Title
6 VII. One example is that punitive damages are not available under the ADEA, as the statute provides
7 a substitute of “liquidated” (double) damages for “willful” violations. This difference and all others
8 will be noted in the commentary to the individual ADEA instructions.

9 Admissibility of Evidence of Other Acts of Age Discrimination

10 In Sprint/United Mgmt. Co. v. Mendelsohn, 128 S.Ct. 1140 (2007), the Court provided 11 guidance on how a trial court should treat evidence of “other acts” of age discrimination. The 12 plaintiff argued that her employer had a company-wide policy discriminating against age, and 13 proffered a number of instances in which other age-protected employees had suffered adverse job
14 determinations. The trial court excluded this evidence on the ground that none of the instances
15 involved the plaintiff’s immediate supervisors. The court of appeals took this as a ruling that “me-16 too” evidence was never relevant, i.e., as a per se rule of exclusion.

17 The Supreme Court agreed with the court of appeals that a per se rule of admissibility or 18 inadmissibility of other acts of discrimination is not permissible, given that Fed.R.Evid. 403 requires
19 the trial court to balance the probative value of evidence against the dangers of prejudice, confusion
20 and delay. But the Court found it “not entirely clear” that the trial court in this case had in fact
21 excluded the evidence under a per se rule. It remanded the case to allow the trial court “to conduct
22 the relevant inquiry under the appropriate standard.” The Court noted that “[t]he question whether 23 evidence of discrimination by other supervisors is relevant in an individual ADEA case is fact-based 24 and depends on many factors, including how closely related the evidence is to the plaintiff’s
25 circumstances and theory of the case” and that “[a]pplying Rule 403 to determine if evidence is 26 prejudicial also requires a fact-intensive, context-specific inquiry.”

8.1.1 Elements of an ADEA Claim— Disparate Treatment

Model

In this case [plaintiff] is alleging that [describe alleged treatment] [plaintiff]. In order for [plaintiff] to recover on this discrimination claim against [defendant], [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] intentionally discriminated against [plaintiff]. This means that [plaintiff] must prove that [his/her] age was a determinative factor in [defendant's] decision [describe action] [plaintiff].

To prevail on this claim, [plaintiff] must prove both of the following by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Defendant] [failed to hire] [failed to promote] [demoted] [terminated] [constructively discharged] [plaintiff]; and

Second: [Plaintiff's] age was a determinative factor in [defendant's] decision.

Although [plaintiff] must prove that [defendant] acted with the intent to discriminate, [plaintiff] is not required to prove that [defendant] acted with the particular intent to violate [plaintiff's] federal civil rights. Moreover, [plaintiff] is not required to produce direct evidence of intent, such as statements admitting discrimination. Intentional discrimination may be inferred from the existence of other facts.

[For example, you have been shown statistics in this case. Statistics are one form of evidence from which you may find, but are not required to find, that a defendant intentionally discriminated against a plaintiff. You should evaluate statistical evidence along with all the other evidence received in the case in deciding whether [defendant] intentionally discriminated against [plaintiff]].

[Defendant] has given a nondiscriminatory reason for its [describe defendant's action]. If you disbelieve [defendant's] explanations for its conduct, then you may, but need not, find that [plaintiff] has proved intentional discrimination. In determining whether [defendant's] stated reason for its actions was a pretext, or excuse, for discrimination, you may not question [defendant's] business judgment. You cannot find intentional discrimination simply because you disagree with the business judgment of [defendant] or believe it is harsh or unreasonable. You are not to consider [defendant's] wisdom. However, you may consider whether [defendant's] reason is merely a cover-up for discrimination.

[For use where plaintiff claims replacement by a younger employee:

In this case [plaintiff] is claiming that [he/she] was replaced by a younger employee [name]. It is not necessary for [plaintiff's] replacement to be under 40 years of age. The question is whether [name of replacement employee] is substantially younger than [plaintiff].]

[For use in a reduction in force case:

1 In this case, [plaintiff] was laid off from [his/her] job as part of a reduction in force.
2 [Plaintiff] need not show that he was replaced in [his/her] position by a younger employee. But 3 [plaintiff] must show that [he/she] was laid off from a position for which [he/she] was qualified, and 4 that substantially younger employees were treated more favorably.]

5 Concluding instruction:

6 Ultimately, you must decide whether [plaintiff] has proven that [his/her] age was a
7 determinative factor in [defendant's employment decision.] "Determinative factor" means that if not 8 for the plaintiff's age, the [adverse employment action] would not have occurred.

9 In deciding whether age was a determinative factor, you must be careful to distinguish age
10 from other factors that are not dependent on age. [For example, if [defendant's] action was based on 11 [plaintiff's] seniority, this is not an age-dependent decision. A person's seniority is based on time
12 with the employer, and this is not the same factor as the person's age. Thus, an employer does not 13 violate the ADEA just by interfering with an older employee's benefits that would have vested by 14 virtue of the employee's years of service.]

15 Comment

16 "To establish a disparate-treatment claim under the plain language of the ADEA, ... a plaintiff
17 must prove that age was the 'but-for' cause of the employer's adverse decision." Gross v. FBL
18 Financial Services, Inc., 129 S. Ct. 2343, 2350 (2009). Under Gross, the "mixed motive"
19 burden-shifting instruction that courts apply to some Title VII cases under Price Waterhouse v.
20 Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989), is unavailable in ADEA cases. Thus, this chapter contains no
21 analogue to Instruction 5.1.1.

22 Instruction 8.1.1 is modeled on Instruction 5.1.2's language concerning Title VII pretext
23 cases. The Gross Court stated that it "has not definitively decided whether the evidentiary
24 framework of McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 ... (1973), utilized in Title VII cases
25 is appropriate in the ADEA context," see Gross, 129 S. Ct. at 2349 n.2. See Reeves v. Sanderson
26 Plumbing Products, Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 142 (2000) ("This Court has not squarely addressed whether 27 the McDonnell Douglas framework, developed to assess claims brought under § 703(a)(1) of Title
28 VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 ... , also applies to ADEA actions. Because the parties do not 29 dispute the issue, we shall assume, arguendo, that the McDonnell Douglas framework is fully 30 applicable here."). Assuming that the McDonnell Douglas framework generally applies in ADEA
31 cases, the following observations can be made.

32 Miller v. Cigna Corp., 47 F.3d 586 (3d Cir. 1995) (en banc), was decided under the 33 assumption that ADEA mixed-motive cases were governed by a framework distinct from that 34 governing ADEA pretext cases. Obviously, that assumption is no longer good law after Gross, but 35 the Miller court's discussion of the appropriate instruction for an ADEA pretext case remains 36 instructive:

1 A plaintiff in an ADEA case who does not qualify for a burden shifting instruction under
2 Price Waterhouse [i.e., a “mixed-motive” case] has the burden of persuading the trier of fact
3 by a preponderance of the evidence that there is a “but-for” causal connection between the 4 plaintiff’s age and the employer’s adverse action -- i.e., that age “actually played a role in [the 5 employer’s decisionmaking] process and had a determinative influence on the outcome” of 6 that process.

7 Miller, 47 F.3d at 596-97 (quoting Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 610 (1993)). The 8 court in Miller reversed a verdict for the defendant because the trial judge instructed the jury that age
9 must be the “sole cause” of the employer’s decision. That standard was too stringent; instead, in a 10 pretext case, “plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that age played a role in the 11 employer’s decisionmaking process and that it had a determinative effect on the outcome of that 12 process.”

13 If the plaintiff establishes a prima facie case of discrimination, the burden shifts to the 14 defendant to produce evidence of a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for the challenged
15 employment action. See St. Mary’s Honor Center v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 506-07 (1993) (Title VII 16 case). “The legitimacy of the employer’s proffered business justification will be affected both by 17 the duties and responsibilities of the employee’s position and the nature of the justification.
18 Concomitantly, the significance of variations among an individual’s personnel evaluations may well
19 depend upon the nature of the employee’s responsibilities; a more exacting standard of performance
20 may have to be applied to positions of greater responsibility.” Healy v. New York Life Ins. Co., 860
21 F.2d 1209, 1214 (3d Cir. 1988) (ADEA case).

22 If the defendant meets its burden of producing evidence of a nondiscriminatory reason for 23 its action, the plaintiff must persuade the jury that the defendant’s stated reason was merely a pretext
24 for age discrimination, or in some other way prove it more likely than not that age motivated the 25 employer. Texas Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 253 (1981) (Title VII case).
26 The plaintiff retains the ultimate burden of proving intentional discrimination. Chipollini v. Spencer
27 Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 893, 897 (3d Cir. 1987) (en banc) (“Under the ADEA, the ultimate burden
28 remains with the plaintiff to prove that age was a determinative factor in the defendant employer’s
29 decision. The plaintiff need not prove that age was the employer’s sole or exclusive consideration, 30 but must prove that age made a difference in the decision.”). The factfinder’s rejection of the 31 employer’s proffered reason allows, but does not compel, judgment for the plaintiff. Reeves v.
32 Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 147 (2000) (“In appropriate circumstances, the 33 trier of fact can reasonably infer from the falsity of the explanation that the employer is dissembling 34 to cover up a discriminatory purpose.”). The employer’s proffered reason can be shown to be 35 pretextual by circumstantial as well as direct evidence. Chipollini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 36 893 (3d Cir. 1987) (en banc) (ADEA case). “To discredit the employer’s proffered reason . . . the 37 plaintiff cannot simply show that the employer’s decision was wrong or mistaken, since the factual
38 dispute at issue is whether discriminatory animus motivated the employer, not whether the employer
39 is wise, shrewd, prudent or competent.” Keller v. Orix Credit Alliance, Inc., 130 F.3d 1101, 1109
40 (3d Cir. 1997) (ADEA case). See also Tomasso v. Boeing Co., 445 F.3d 702, 707 (3d Cir. 2006)
41 (ADEA case) (noting that the employee “need not always offer evidence sufficient to discredit all

1 of the rationales advanced by the employer” because “the rejection of some explanations may so
2 undermine the employer’s credibility as to enable a rational factfinder to disbelieve the remaining
3 rationales, even where the employee fails to produce evidence particular to those rationales.”).

4 Seniority Distinct From Age

5 In Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 611 (1993), the Court held that the ADEA does
6 not prohibit discrimination on the basis of an employee’s seniority, as distinct from age. In Hazen,
7 the employer fired the employee to prevent him from vesting in the pension plan. The Court found
8 that the employer’s action was not prohibited by the ADEA. The Court reasoned as follows:

9 [T]he ADEA commands that "employers are to evaluate [older] employees . . . on their 10 merits and not their age." Western Air Lines, Inc. v. Criswell, 472 U.S. 400, 422 (1985). The 11 employer cannot rely on age as a proxy for an employee's remaining characteristics, such as 12 productivity, but must instead focus on those factors directly.

13 When the employer's decision is wholly motivated by factors other than age, the 14 problem of inaccurate and stigmatizing stereotypes disappears. This is true even if the 15 motivating factor is correlated with age, as pension status typically is. . . . On average, an 16 older employee has had more years in the work force than a younger employee, and thus may 17 well have accumulated more years of service with a particular employer. Yet an employee's 18 age is analytically distinct from his years of service. An employee who is younger than 40,
19 and therefore outside the class of older workers as defined by the ADEA, see 29 U. S. C. §
20 631(a), may have worked for a particular employer his entire career, while an older worker
21 may have been newly hired. Because age and years of service are analytically distinct, an 22 employer can take account of one while ignoring the other, and thus it is incorrect to say that 23 a decision based on years of service is necessarily "age based."

24 . . .

25 We do not preclude the possibility that an employer who targets employees with a 26 particular pension status on the assumption that these employees are likely to be older
27 thereby engages in age discrimination. Pension status may be a proxy for age, not in the sense
28 that the ADEA makes the two factors equivalent, but in the sense that the employer may 29 suppose a correlation between the two factors and act accordingly. . . . Finally, we do not 30 consider the special case where an employee is about to vest in pension benefits as a result 31 of his age, rather than years of service, and the employer fires the employee in order to 32 prevent vesting. That case is not presented here. Our holding is simply that an employer does 33 not violate the ADEA just by interfering with an older employee's pension benefits that 34 would have vested by virtue of the employee's years of service.

35 See also Kentucky Retirement Systems v. EEOC, 128 S. Ct. 2361, 2370 (2008) (“Where an employer
36 adopts a pension plan that includes age as a factor, and that employer then treats employees
37 differently based on pension status, a plaintiff, to state a disparate treatment claim under the ADEA,

1 must adduce sufficient evidence to show that the differential treatment was ‘actually motivated’ by
2 age, not pension status.”). The pattern instruction advises the jury to distinguish between age-related
3 discrimination and discrimination on other grounds that might correlate with age.

4 Substantially Younger Replacement

5 In O’Connor v. Consolidated Coin Caterers Corp., 517 U.S. 308 (1996), the Court rejected
6 the argument that an ADEA plaintiff in a discharge case must show that he was replaced by someone 7 under 40. Under O’Connor, the question is whether the employer relied on age in making the 8 challenged decision, not on whether the employer chose someone outside the protected class. The 9 Court added, however, that an inference of age discrimination “cannot be drawn from the 10 replacement of one worker with another insignificantly younger.” 517 U.S. at 313. See also Maxfield
11 v. Sinclair Int’l, 766 F.2d 788, 792-93 (3d Cir. 1985) (“The probative value of the age of the 12 replacement will depend on the circumstances of the case. Although replacement by someone 13 younger, without more, will not give rise to an inference of age discrimination, it has been noted that 14 a substantial difference in the ages may be circumstantial evidence that gives rise to that inference.
15 [citing cases] If the difference in ages of the two employees were insignificant, the district court 16 would likely find that the evidence was insufficient to permit an inference of discrimination.”).

17 On the question of what is a substantial difference in age, see, e.g., Sempier v. Johnson &
18 Higgins, 45 F.3d 724 (3d Cir. 1995) (noting that no particular age difference must be shown; citing
19 cases holding that a five year difference was sufficient, and other case law indicating that a one year 20 difference was insufficient to support an inference of age discrimination).

21 Discrimination on the Basis of Relative Youth

22 ADEA liability does not lie when a member of the protected class suffers discrimination
23 because she is too young. In General Dynamics Land Systems, Inc., v. Cline, 540 U.S. 581 (2004), 24 the employer retained health care benefits only for current employers who were older than 50. This 25 meant that employees within the protected age class of 40-50 were disentitled. The Court rejected
26 an ADEA claim, relying on legislative history indicating that Congress intended to protect older
27 workers only; it did not prohibit favoring the old over the young. In sum, “ADEA protects only 28 relatively older workers (over 40) from discrimination favoring relatively younger ones (of any 29 age).” Lewis & Norman, Employment Discrimination Law and Practice 428 (2d ed. 2004).

30 Reduction in Force

31 On the standards for proving age discrimination in reduction in force cases, see, e.g.,
32 Tomasso v. Boeing Co., 445 F.3d 702, 706 n.4 (3d Cir. 2006):

33 Ordinarily, to make out a prima facie case [of age discrimination] the plaintiff must show .
34 . . . that he was replaced by a sufficiently younger person to create an inference of age 35 discrimination. Fakete v. Aetna, Inc., 308 F.3d 335, 338 (3d Cir. 2002). However, where an 36 employee is terminated during a RIF, the [disputed question] becomes whether the employer
37 retained employees who do not belong to the protected class.

1     See also Dreyer v. ARCO Chemical Co., 801 F.2d 651, 653 (3d Cir. 1986) (noting that in reduction
2     of force cases “it is often impracticable to require a plaintiff whose job has been eliminated to show
3     replacement” and so the question becomes whether the plaintiff was laid off from a job for which 4     he was qualified while substantially younger employees were treated more favorably), overruled on
5     other grounds by Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 617 (1993); Anderson v. CONRAIL,
6     297 F.3d 242 (3d Cir. 2002) (in a reduction in force case, the plaintiff must show that a similarly 7     situated substantially younger employee was retained).

8.1.2 Elements of an ADEA Claim — Harassment — Hostile Work Environment — Tangible Employment Action

Model

[Plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was subjected to harassment by [names] and that this harassment was motivated by [plaintiff's] age.

[Employer] is liable for the actions of [names] in plaintiff's claim of harassment if [plaintiff] proves all of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Plaintiff] was subjected to [describe alleged conduct or conditions giving rise to plaintiff's claim] by [names].

Second: [Names] conduct was not welcomed by [plaintiff].

Third: [Names] conduct was motivated by the fact that [plaintiff] is [age over 40].

Fourth: The conduct was so severe or pervasive that a reasonable person in [plaintiff's] position would find [plaintiff's] work environment to be hostile or abusive. This element requires you to look at the evidence from the point of view of a reasonable person of [plaintiff's age]'s reaction to [plaintiff's] work environment.

Fifth: [Plaintiff] believed [his/her] work environment to be hostile or abusive as a result of [names] conduct.

Sixth: [Plaintiff] suffered an adverse “tangible employment action” as a result of the hostile work environment; a tangible employment action is defined as a significant change in employment status, such as hiring, firing, failing to promote, reassignment with significantly different responsibilities, or a decision causing significant change in benefits.

[For use when the alleged harassment is by non-supervisory employees:

Seventh: Management level employees knew, or should have known, of the abusive conduct. Management level employees should have known of the abusive conduct if 1) an employee provided management level personnel with enough information to raise a probability of age harassment in the mind of a reasonable employer, or if 2) the harassment was so pervasive and open that a reasonable employer would have had to be aware of it.]

Comment

Courts have held that the ADEA prohibits harassment on the basis of age (when the plaintiff is 40 years of age or older) though there is no Third Circuit case law on the subject. See, e.g.,

1 Montgomery v. John Deere & Co., 169 F.3d 556 (8th Cir. 1999) (asking an employee when he is
2 going to retire can sometimes be so unnecessary and excessive as to constitute evidence of 3 discriminatory harassment); Peacock v. Northwestern Nat'l Ins. Group, 156 F.3d 1231 (6th Cir. 1998)
4 (unpublished opinion) (“In order to prove a prima facie case of a hostile work environment, a
5 plaintiff must show: 1) that the employee is 40 years or older; 2) the employee was subjected to 6 harassment either through words or actions, based on age; 3) the harassment had the effect of 7 unreasonably interfering with the employee’s work performance and creating an objectively
8 intimidating, hostile or offensive work environment ; and 4) the existence of some basis for liability
9 on the part of the employer.”); Burns v. AAF-McQuay, Inc., 166 F.3d 292 (4th Cir. 1999) (same
10 standard); EEOC v. Massey Yardley Chrysler Plymouth, Inc., 117 F.3d 1244 (11th Cir. 1997)
11 (upholding a verdict on a claim of hostile work environment under the ADEA).

12 This instruction is substantively identical to Instruction 5.1.4, covering hostile work
13 environment claims with a tangible employment action under Title VII. Like Title VII — and unlike 14 Section 1981 — the ADEA regulates employers only, and not individual employees. Therefore, the 15 instruction is written in terms of employer liability for the acts of its employees.

16 Respondeat superior liability for harassment by non-supervisory employees exists only where 17 "the defendant knew or should have known of the harassment and failed to take prompt remedial 18 action." Andrews v. City of Philadelphia, 895 F.2d 1469, 1486 (3d Cir. 1990).

19 If the court wishes to provide a more detailed instruction on what constitutes a hostile work
20 environment, such an instruction is provided in 8.2.1.

21 It should be noted that constructive discharge is the adverse employment action that is most 22 common with claims of hostile work environment.<sup>1</sup> Instruction 8.2.2 provides an instruction setting
23 forth the relevant factors for a finding of constructive discharge. That instruction can be used to 24 amplify the term “adverse employment action” in appropriate cases.

<sup>1</sup> As Comment 8.1.3 notes (by analogy to the framework for Title VII hostile environment claims) the employer may raise an affirmative defense under Faragher v. Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775 (1998), and Burlington Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742 (1998), if no tangible employment action has been taken against the plaintiff. In Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders, 542 U.S. 129, 140-41 (2004), the Court addressed the question of constructive discharge in a Title VII case, holding “that an employer does not have recourse to the Ellerth/ Faragher affirmative defense when a supervisor's official act precipitates the constructive discharge; absent such a ‘tangible employment action,’ however, the defense is available to the employer whose supervisors are charged with harassment.” Assuming that the same approach applies in ADEA cases, Instruction 8.1.2 is appropriate for use in cases where the evidence supports a claim that the constructive discharge resulted from an official act or acts. However, where the constructive discharge did not result from an official act, an affirmative defense is available to the employer and Instruction 8.1.3 should be used instead.

1           The instruction’s definition of “tangible employment action” is taken from Burlington
2     Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 761 (1998).

3           These ADEA instructions on harassment do not include a pattern instruction for quid pro quo
4     claims. This is because quid pro quo claims are almost invariably grounded in sex discrimination,
5     and the ADEA applies to age discrimination only. If an ADEA claim is ever raised on quid pro quo
6     grounds, the court can modify Instruction 5.1.3 for that occasion.

7           For further commentary on hostile work environment claims, see the Comment to Instruction 8     5.1.4.

8.1.3 Elements of an ADEA Claim — Harassment — Hostile Work Environment — No Tangible Employment Action

Model

[Plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was subjected to harassment by [names] and that this harassment was motivated by [plaintiff's] age.

[Employer] is liable for the actions of [names] in [plaintiff's] claim of discriminatory harassment if [plaintiff] proves all of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Plaintiff] was subjected to [describe alleged conduct or conditions giving rise to plaintiff's claim] by [names].

Second: [Names] conduct was not welcomed by [plaintiff].

Third: [Names] conduct was motivated by the fact that [plaintiff] is [age over 40].

Fourth: The conduct was so severe or pervasive that a reasonable person in [plaintiff's] position would find [plaintiff's] work environment to be hostile or abusive. This element requires you to look at the evidence from the point of view of a reasonable person of [plaintiff's age]'s reaction to [plaintiff's] work environment.

Fifth: [Plaintiff] believed [his/her] work environment to be hostile or abusive as a result of [names] conduct.

[For use when the alleged harassment is by non-supervisory employees:

Sixth: Management level employees knew, or should have known, of the abusive conduct. You can find that management level employees should have known of the abusive conduct if 1) an employee provided management level personnel with enough information to raise a probability of age harassment in the mind of a reasonable employer, or if 2) the harassment was so pervasive and open that a reasonable employer would have had to be aware of it.]

If any of the above elements has not been proved by a preponderance of the evidence, your verdict must be for [defendant] and you need not proceed further in considering this claim. If you find that the elements have been proved, then you must consider [employer's] affirmative defense. I will instruct you now on the elements of that affirmative defense.

You must find for [defendant] if you find that [defendant] has proved both of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: That [defendant] exercised reasonable care to prevent harassment in the workplace on the basis of age, and also exercised reasonable care to promptly correct any harassing behavior that does occur.

1           Second: That [plaintiff] unreasonably failed to take advantage of any preventive or 2           corrective opportunities provided by [defendant].

3           Proof of the following facts will be enough to establish the first element that I just referred 4           to, concerning prevention and correction of harassment:

5           1. [Defendant] had established an explicit policy against harassment in the workplace
6           on the basis of age.

7           2. That policy was fully communicated to its employees.

8           3. That policy provided a reasonable way for [plaintiff] to make a claim of 9           harassment to higher management.

10          4. Reasonable steps were taken to correct the problem, if raised by [plaintiff].

11          On the other hand, proof that [plaintiff] did not follow a reasonable complaint procedure
12          provided by [defendant] will ordinarily be enough to establish that [plaintiff] unreasonably failed to 13          take advantage of a corrective opportunity.

14 15       Comment

16          As discussed in the Commentary to Instruction 8.1.3, courts have held that the ADEA
17          protects against harassment on the basis of age, though the Third Circuit has not yet decided the 18          question.

19          This instruction is substantively identical to Instruction 5.1.5, covering hostile work
20          environment claims with no tangible employment action under Title VII. Like Title VII — and 21          unlike Section 1981 — the ADEA regulates employers only, and not individual employees.
22          Therefore, the instruction is written in terms of employer liability for the acts of its employees.

23          This instruction is to be used in discriminatory harassment cases where the plaintiff did not 24          suffer any "tangible" employment action such as discharge or demotion, but rather suffered
25          "intangible" harm flowing from harassment that is "sufficiently severe or pervasive to create a hostile
26          work environment." Faragher v. Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 808 (1998). In Faragher and in 27          Burlington Industries, Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742 (1998), the Court held that an employer is strictly 28          liable for supervisor harassment that "culminates in a tangible employment action, such as discharge,
29          demotion, or undesirable reassignment." Ellerth, 524 U.S. at 765. But when no such tangible action
30          is taken, the employer may raise an affirmative defense to liability. To prevail on the basis of the 31          defense, the employer must prove that "(a) [it] exercised reasonable care to prevent and correct
32          promptly any sexually harassing behavior," and that (b) the employee "unreasonably failed to take
33          advantage of any preventive or corrective opportunities provided by the employer or to avoid harm
34          otherwise." Ellerth, 524 U.S. at 751 (1998).

1        Besides the affirmative defense provided by Ellerth, the absence of a tangible employment
2 action also justifies requiring the plaintiff to prove a further element, in order to protect the employer
3 from unwarranted liability for the discriminatory acts of its non-supervisor employees. Respondeat
4 superior liability for the acts of non-supervisory employees exists only where "the defendant knew
5 or should have known of the harassment and failed to take prompt remedial action." Andrews v. City
6 of Philadelphia, 895 F.2d 1469, 1486 (3d Cir. 1990).

7        If the court wishes to provide a more detailed instruction on what constitutes a hostile work
8 environment, such an instruction is provided in 8.2.1.

9        These ADEA instructions on harassment do not include a pattern instruction for quid pro quo
10 claims. This is because quid pro quo claims are almost invariably grounded in sex discrimination,
11 and the ADEA applies to age discrimination only. If an ADEA claim is ever raised on quid pro quo
12 grounds, the court can modify Instruction 5.1.3 for that occasion.

13        For further commentary on hostile work environment claims, see Instructions 5.1.4 and 5.1.5.

8.1.4 Elements of an ADEA Claim–Disparate Impact

Model

In this case, [plaintiff] claims that [defendant], by [describe employment practice], has caused an adverse, disproportionate impact on persons 40 years of age or older. The parties agree that [defendant’s] conduct is neutral on its face, but [plaintiff] contends that in fact people 40 and older have been treated more harshly by [defendant]. This is what is known in the law as “disparate impact.”

To find a disparate impact, you do not need to consider whether [defendant] intended to discriminate against persons 40 and older. You must focus on the consequences or results of specific employment practices.

To recover on [his/her] claim of disparate impact, [plaintiff] must prove both of the following by a preponderance of the evidence.

First: [Defendant] has engaged in a specific employment practice or practices that caused [defendant] to [fail to hire] [fail to promote] [demote] [terminate] [constructively discharge][plaintiff] because [plaintiff] was [40 or older].

Second: [Defendant's] [describe employment practice] had a significantly disproportionate adverse impact on persons 40 years of age or older.

Note that it is not enough for [plaintiff] to prove that workers 40 and older have suffered a disparate impact. Nor is it enough to allege that some generalized policy is responsible for a disparate impact. Instead, [plaintiff] must prove that a specific employment practice or practices caused the disproportionate adverse impact on persons 40 years of age or older.

[Affirmative Defense:

[Defendant] contends that [describe employment practice] was based on reasonable factors other than age. [Defendant] has the burden of proving both of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: The [employment practice] [selection criterion] is job-related for the positions in question.

Second: The [employment practice] [selection criterion] is justified by business necessity.

If you find that [plaintiff] has proved each of the elements on which [he/she] has the burden of proof, your verdict should be for [plaintiff], unless you also find that [defendant] has proved this affirmative defense, in which event your verdict should be for [defendant].]

Comment

In DiBiase v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 48 F.3d 719, 726 (3d Cir. 1995), the court explained the distinction between “disparate impact” and “disparate treatment” claims:

A policy can be discriminatory because of its treatment of or impact on employees. In a disparate treatment case, the employer simply treats some people less favorably because of their [protected status]. On the other hand, disparate impact liability involves employment activities that are facially neutral in their treatment of different groups but that in fact fall more harshly on one group than another and cannot be justified by business necessity. (Citations omitted).

In Smith v. City of Jackson, 544 U.S. 228 (2005), the Court held that the ADEA authorizes recovery on disparate impact claims, comparable to the claim established in Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424 (1971), which announced a disparate impact theory of recovery in Title VII cases. The Court observed, however, that the disparate impact ground of recovery in the ADEA is narrower than that provided in Title VII, in two respects. First, the ADEA permits a disparate impact “where the differentiation is based on reasonable factors other than age.” 29 U.S.C. § 623(f)(1). Second, the 1991 amendment to Title VII modified the Supreme Court’s holding in Ward’s Cove Packing v. Atonio, 490 U.S. 642 (1989), in which the Court narrowly construed the employer’s exposure to disparate-impact liability under Title VII. Because the 1991 amendment did not affect the ADEA, it follows that the standards of Ward’s Cove remain applicable to disparate impact actions under the ADEA. Under Ward’s Cove, “it is not enough to simply allege that there is a disparate impact on workers, or point to a generalized policy that leads to such an impact. Rather, the employee is responsible for isolating and identifying the specific employment practices that are allegedly responsible for any observed statistical disparities.” Smith v. Jackson, 544 U.S. at 235 (emphasis in original). The instruction reflects both of these limitations on disparate impact recovery in ADEA cases.

Unlike Title VII, the ADEA provides a right to jury trial for all claims covered by the Act, including, now, disparate impact claims. See 29 U.S.C. § 626(c)(2) (“[A] person shall be entitled to a trial by jury of any issue of fact in any [ADEA] action . . . regardless of whether equitable relief is sought by any party in such action.”).

Affirmative Defense for Reasonable Factors Other Than Age

In Meacham v. Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory, 128 S.Ct. 2395 (2008), the Court held that in a disparate-impact case, the employer has the burden of production of proving that its employment decision was made on the basis of reasonable factors other than age. The Instruction accordingly sets forth reasonable factors other than age as an affirmative defense.

8.1.5 Elements of an ADEA Claim — Retaliation

Model

[Plaintiff] claims that [defendant] discriminated against [him/her] because of [plaintiff's] [describe protected activity].

To prevail on this claim, [plaintiff] must prove all of the following by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: [Plaintiff] [describe activity protected by the ADEA].

Second: [Plaintiff] was subjected to a materially adverse action at the time, or after, the protected conduct took place.

Third: There was a causal connection between [describe challenged activity] and [plaintiff's] [describe plaintiff's protected activity].

Concerning the first element, [plaintiff] need not prove the merits of [his/her] [describe plaintiff's activity], but only that [he/she] was acting under a good faith belief that [plaintiff's] [or someone else's] rights under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act were violated.

Concerning the second element, the term “materially adverse” means that [plaintiff] must show [describe alleged retaliatory activity] was serious enough that it well might have discouraged a reasonable worker from [describe plaintiff's protected activity]. [The activity need not be related to the workplace or to [plaintiff's] employment.]

Concerning the third element, that of causal connection, that connection may be shown in many ways. For example, you may or may not find that there is a sufficient connection through timing, that is [defendant's] action followed shortly after [defendant] became aware of [plaintiff's] [describe activity]. Causation is, however, not necessarily ruled out by a more extended passage of time. Causation may or may not be proven by antagonism shown toward [plaintiff] or a change in demeanor toward [plaintiff].

Ultimately, you must decide whether [plaintiff's] [protected activity] had a determinative effect on [describe alleged retaliatory activity]. “Determinative effect” means that if not for [plaintiff's] [protected activity], [describe alleged retaliatory activity] would not have occurred.

Comment

The ADEA provides a cause of action for retaliation:

(d) Opposition to unlawful practices; participation in investigations, proceedings, or litigation. It shall be unlawful for an employer to discriminate against any of his employees or applicants for employment, for an employment agency to discriminate against any individual, or for a labor organization to discriminate against any member thereof or applicant for membership, because such individual, member or applicant for membership has opposed any practice made unlawful by this section, or because such individual, member or applicant for membership has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or litigation under this Act.

29 U.S.C. § 623(d). This section applies to protect employees in the private sector; the ADEA provision covering federal employees, see 29 U.S.C. §633a(a), does not contain an explicit provision on retaliation. However, the Supreme Court in Gomez-Perez v. Potter, 128 S.Ct. 1931, 1943 (2008), held “that § 633a(a) prohibits retaliation against a federal employee who complains of age discrimination.”

The substantive standards for a retaliation claim under the ADEA are generally the same as those applied to Title VII retaliation claims. Lewis and Norman, Employment Discrimination 453 (2d ed. 2004) (“Section 623(d) of ADEA provides protection against retaliation in the same terms as § 704(a) of Title VII.”).

Protected Activity

The most common activities protected from retaliation under the ADEA and Title VII are: 1) opposing or complaining about discrimination; 2) making a charge of employment discrimination; 3) testifying, assisting or participating in any manner in an investigation, proceeding or hearing under the ADEA. See the discussion of protected activity in the Comment to Instruction 5.1.7. See also Fasold v. Justice, 409 F.3d 178, 188 (3d Cir. 2005) (filing a complaint with the EEOC is protected activity); Glanzman v. Metropolitan Management Corp., 391 F.3d 506 (3d Cir. 2004) (if plaintiff were fired for being a possible witness in an employment discrimination action brought under the ADEA, this would be unlawful retaliation); Robinson v. City of Pittsburgh, 120 F.3d 1286, 1299 (3d Cir. 1997) (filing discrimination complaint constitutes protected activity), overruled on other grounds by Burlington N. & S.F. Ry. Co. v. White, 126 S.Ct. 2405 (2006); Kachmar v. Sungard Data Sys., Inc., 109 F.3d 173, 177 (3rd Cir. 1997) (advocating equal treatment was protected activity); Aman v. Cort Furniture, 85 F.3d 1074, 1085 (3d Cir. 1989) (“protesting what an employee believes in good faith to be a discriminatory practice is clearly protected conduct”). The question of whether a particular activity is “protected” from retaliation is a question of law; whether the plaintiff engaged in that activity is a question of fact for the jury.

Standard for Actionable Retaliation

The Supreme Court in Burlington N. & S.F. Ry. v. White, 126 S.Ct. 2405, 2415 (2006), held that a cause of action for retaliation under Title VII lies whenever the employer responds to protected activity in such a way “that a reasonable employee would have found the challenged action materially adverse, which in this context means it well might have dissuaded a reasonable worker

1 from making or supporting a charge of discrimination.” (citations omitted). The Court elaborated on 2 this standard in the following passage:

3 We speak of material adversity because we believe it is important to separate
4 significant from trivial harms. Title VII, we have said, does not set forth “a general civility
5 code for the American workplace.” Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Services, Inc., 523 U.S.
6 75, 80, 118 S. Ct. 998, 140 L. Ed. 2d 201 (1998). An employee’s decision to report
7 discriminatory behavior cannot immunize that employee from those petty slights or minor
8 annoyances that often take place at work and that all employees experience. See 1 B.
9 Lindemann & P. Grossman, Employment Discrimination Law 669 (3d ed. 1996) (noting that 10 “courts have held that personality conflicts at work that generate antipathy” and “snubbing’
11 by supervisors and co-workers” are not actionable under § 704(a)). The anti-retaliation
12 provision seeks to prevent employer interference with “unfettered access” to Title VII’s
13 remedial mechanisms. It does so by prohibiting employer actions that are likely “to deter 14 victims of discrimination from complaining to the EEOC,” the courts, and their employers.
15 And normally petty slights, minor annoyances, and simple lack of good manners will not 16 create such deterrence. See 2 EEOC 1998 Manual § 8, p. 8-13.

17 We refer to reactions of a reasonable employee because we believe that the 18 provision’s standard for judging harm must be objective. An objective standard is judicially
19 administrable. It avoids the uncertainties and unfair discrepancies that can plague a judicial 20 effort to determine a plaintiff’s unusual subjective feelings. We have emphasized the need 21 for objective standards in other Title VII contexts, and those same concerns animate our 22 decision here. See, e.g., [Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders, 542 U.S., at 141, 124 S. Ct.
23 2342, 159 L. Ed. 2d 204 (constructive discharge doctrine); Harris v. Forklift Systems, Inc., 24 510 U.S. 17, 21, 114 S. Ct. 367, 126 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1993) (hostile work environment 25 doctrine).

26 We phrase the standard in general terms because the significance of any given act
27 of retaliation will often depend upon the particular circumstances. Context matters. . . . A 28 schedule change in an employee’s work schedule may make little difference to many workers,
29 but may matter enormously to a young mother with school age children. A supervisor’s 30 refusal to invite an employee to lunch is normally trivial, a nonactionable petty slight. But 31 to retaliate by excluding an employee from a weekly training lunch that contributes 32 significantly to the employee’s professional advancement might well deter a reasonable 33 employee from complaining about discrimination. Hence, a legal standard that speaks in 34 general terms rather than specific prohibited acts is preferable, for an act that would be 35 immaterial in some situations is material in others.

36 Finally, we note that . . . the standard is tied to the challenged retaliatory act, not the 37 underlying conduct that forms the basis of the Title VII complaint. By focusing on the 38 materiality of the challenged action and the perspective of a reasonable person in the 39 plaintiff’s position, we believe this standard will screen out trivial conduct while effectively capturing those acts that are likely to dissuade employees from complaining or assisting in complaints about discrimination.

126 S.Ct. at 2415 (some citations omitted).

The anti-retaliation provision of Title VII, construed by the Court in White, is substantively identical to the ADEA provision on retaliation, supra. This instruction therefore follows the guidelines of the Supreme Court’s decision in White.

No Requirement That Retaliation Be Job-Related To Be Actionable

The Supreme Court in Burlington N. & S.F. Ry. v. White, 126 S.Ct. 2405, 2413 (2006), held that retaliation need not be job-related to be actionable under Title VII. In doing so, the Court rejected authority from the Third Circuit (and others) requiring that the plaintiff suffer an adverse employment action in order to recover for retaliation. The Court distinguished Title VII’s retaliation provision from its basic anti-discrimination provision, which does require an adverse employment action. The Court noted that unlike the basic anti-discrimination provision, which refers to conditions of employment, the anti-retaliation provision is broadly worded to prohibit any discrimination by an employer in response to protected activity.

Because the ADEA anti-retaliation provision is substantively identical to the Title VII provision construed in White — it broadly prohibits discrimination without reference to employment-related decisions — this instruction contains bracketed material to cover a plaintiff’s claim for retaliation that is not job-related. The instruction does not follow pre-White Third Circuit authority which required the plaintiff in a retaliation claim to prove that she suffered an adverse employment action. See, e.g., Nelson v. Upsala College, 51 F.3d 383, 386 (3d Cir.1995)(requiring the plaintiff in a retaliation case to prove among other things that “the employer took an adverse employment action against her”).

It should be noted, however, that damages for emotional distress and pain and suffering are not recoverable under the ADEA. Rogers v. Exxon Research and Engineering Co., 550 F.2d 834, 842 (3d Cir. 1977) (relying on legislative history tying recovery under the ADEA to that provided by the Fair Labor Standards Act, and not Title VII; holding that “damages for pain and suffering or emotional distress cannot properly be awarded in ADEA cases”), overruled on other grounds by Holliday v. Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, Inc., 584 F.2d 1221 (3d Cir. 1978) (en banc). So, to the extent that retaliatory activity is not job-related, it is probably less likely to be compensable under the ADEA than it is under Title VII. For further discussion of White, see the Comment to Instruction 5.1.7.

Determinative Effect

As discussed in Comment 8.1.1, the Supreme Court has held with respect to non-retaliation ADEA claims that the plaintiff must prove but-for causation (and thus that a mixed-motive burden-shifting framework is unavailable). See Gross v. FBL Financial Services, Inc., 129 S. Ct. 2343, 2351 (2009). Although the Gross Court was interpreting 29 U.S.C. § 636(a), its reasoning

1 seems equally applicable to 29 U.S.C. § 636(d) (the ADEA’s anti-retaliation provision).
2 Accordingly, Instruction 8.1.5 requires the plaintiff to prove that the plaintiff’s protected activity had 3 a determinative effect on the defendant’s retaliatory activity.

4 Employer’s Attitude Toward Employee

5 On the relevance of an employer’s attitude toward an employee who engaged in protected
6 activity, see Fasold v. Justice, 409 F.3d 178, 190 (3d Cir. 2005) (reversing a grant of summary
7 judgment for an employer on an ADEA retaliation claim and noting that “we cannot discount the 8 possibility that [the supervisor’s] irritation with Fasold’s pending administrative claims influenced 9 the calculus [the supervisor] made in his decision to deny the Level II grievance.”).

10 Retaliation Against Perceived Protected Activity

11 In Fogleman v. Mercy Hospital, Inc., 283 F.3d 561, 562 (3d Cir. 2002), an ADA case, the 12 court declared that the retaliation provisions in the ADEA protected an employee against retaliation
13 for “perceived” protected activity. “Because the statutes forbid an employer’s taking adverse action 14 against an employee for discriminatory reasons, it does not matter whether the factual basis for the 15 employer’s discriminatory animus was correct and that, so long as the employer’s specific intent was 16 discriminatory, the retaliation is actionable.” 283 F.3d at 562. If the fairly unusual case arises in 17 which the employer is alleged to have retaliated for perceived rather than actual protected activity,
18 then the instruction can be modified consistently with the court’s directive in Fogleman.

8.2.1 ADEA Definitions — Hostile or Abusive Work Environment

Model

In determining whether a work environment is "hostile" you must look at all of the circumstances, which may include:

- The total physical environment of [plaintiff's] work area.
- The degree and type of language and insult that filled the environment before and after [plaintiff] arrived.
- The reasonable expectations of [plaintiff] upon entering the environment.
- The frequency of the offensive conduct.
- The severity of the conduct.
- The effect of the working environment on [plaintiff's] mental and emotional well-being.
- Whether the conduct was unwelcome, that is, conduct [plaintiff] regarded as unwanted or unpleasant.
- Whether the conduct was pervasive.
- Whether the conduct was directed toward [plaintiff].
- Whether the conduct was physically threatening or humiliating.
- Whether the conduct was merely a tasteless remark.
- Whether the conduct unreasonably interfered with [plaintiff's] work performance.

Conduct that amounts only to ordinary socializing in the workplace, such as occasional horseplay, occasional use of abusive language, tasteless jokes, and occasional teasing, does not constitute an abusive or hostile work environment. A hostile work environment can be found only if there is extreme conduct amounting to a material change in the terms and conditions of employment. Moreover, isolated incidents, unless extremely serious, will not amount to a hostile work environment.

It is not enough that the work environment was generally harsh, unfriendly, unpleasant, crude or vulgar to all employees. In order to find a hostile work environment, you must find that [plaintiff] was harassed because of [his/her] age. The harassing conduct may, but need not be age-based in nature. Rather, its defining characteristic is that the harassment complained of was linked to

1 [plaintiff's] age. The key question is whether [plaintiff], as a person of [plaintiff's age] was subjected 2 to harsh employment conditions to which substantially younger employees were not.

3 It is important to understand that, in determining whether a hostile work environment existed
4 at the [employer's workplace] you must consider the evidence from the perspective of a reasonable
5 person of [plaintiff's age] in the same position. That is, you must determine whether a reasonable
6 person of [plaintiff's age] would have been offended or harmed by the conduct in question. You
7 must evaluate the total circumstances and determine whether the alleged harassing behavior could 8 be objectively classified as the kind of behavior that would seriously affect the psychological or 9 emotional well-being of a reasonable person of [plaintiff's age]. The reasonable person of [plaintiff's 10 age] is simply one of normal sensitivity and emotional make-up.

11 12 Comment

13 This instruction can be used if the court wishes to provide a more detailed instruction on what 14 constitutes a hostile work environment than those set forth in Instructions 8.1.3 and 8.1.4. This 15 instruction is substantively identical to the definition of hostile work environment in Title VII cases.
16 See Instruction 5.2.1.

8.2.2 ADEA Definitions — Constructive Discharge

Model

In this case, to show that [he/she] was subjected to an adverse “tangible employment action,” [plaintiff] claims that [he/she] was forced to resign due to conduct that discriminated against [him/her] on the basis of [plaintiff’s] age. Such a forced resignation, if proven, is called a “constructive discharge.” To prove that [he/she] was subjected to a constructive discharge, [plaintiff] must prove that working conditions became so intolerable that a reasonable person in the employee’s position would have felt compelled to resign.

Comment

In ADEA cases (as in Title VII cases, see Comment 5.2.2), courts in the Third Circuit “employ an objective test to determine whether an employee can recover on a claim of constructive discharge.... Specifically, a court must determine ‘whether a reasonable jury could find that the [employer] permitted conditions so unpleasant or difficult that a reasonable person would have felt compelled to resign.’” Duffy v. Paper Magic Group, Inc., 265 F.3d 163, 167 (3d Cir. 2001). Instruction 8.2.2 is substantively identical to the constructive discharge instruction for Title VII actions. See Instruction 5.2.2.

This instruction can be used when the plaintiff was not fired but resigned, and claims that she nonetheless suffered an adverse employment action because she was constructively discharged due to an adverse action or actions that were sanctioned by her employer. This instruction is designed for integration into Instruction 8.1.2 (with respect to the instruction’s sixth element). Assuming that the Title VII framework concerning employer liability for harassment applies to ADEA actions, the employer’s ability to assert an Ellerth / Faragher affirmative defense in a constructive discharge case will depend on whether the constructive discharge resulted from actions that were sanctioned by the employer. See Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders, 542 U.S. 129, 140-41 (2004) (“[A]n employer does not have recourse to the Ellerth / Faragher affirmative defense when a supervisor's official act precipitates the constructive discharge; absent such a ‘tangible employment action,’ however, the defense is available to the employer whose supervisors are charged with harassment.”); see also Comment 5.1.5.

8.3.1 ADEA Defenses — Bona Fide Occupational Qualification

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] has established by a preponderance of the evidence that [defendant] [describe employment action] because of [his/her] age, then you must consider [defendant's] defense that its age limitation is a bona fide occupational qualification.

In order to avoid liability for intentional discrimination on the basis of this contention, [defendant] must prove both of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: That the occupational qualification relied upon by [defendant] is reasonably necessary for the normal operation of [defendant's] business.

Second: That [defendant] either had reasonable cause to believe that all or substantially all persons over the age qualification would be unable to perform the job safely and efficiently, or that it was impossible or highly impractical to consider the necessary qualifications of each older employee. [Defendant's] belief should be evaluated in light of all the circumstances in the case, to determine whether it has a reasonable basis in fact.

If you find that [defendant] has proved these two elements by a preponderance of the evidence, then you must find for [defendant].

Comment

Section 4(f)(1) of the ADEA provides that it is not unlawful for an employer to take an action otherwise prohibited by the Act if “age is a bona fide occupational qualification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of the particular business.” 29 U.S.C. § 629(f)(1). This language is identical to that provided in Title VII. Accordingly, the instruction is substantively identical to Instruction 5.3.1, which covers the BFOQ defense in Title VII cases.

In Western Airlines v. Criswell, 472 U.S. 400, 410 (1985), the Court declared that the BFOQ defense is an “extremely narrow” exception; it held that the defense did not justify the employer’s plan to retire members of commercial airline flight crews when they reached 60 years of age. The Criswell Court described the BFOQ defense applicable in ADEA actions in the following passage:

An employer asserting a BFOQ defense has the burden of proving that (1) the age limit is reasonably necessary to the essence of the business, and either (2) that all or substantially all individuals excluded from the job involved are in fact disqualified, or (3) that some of the individuals so excluded possess a disqualifying trait that cannot be ascertained except by reference to age. If the employer's objective in asserting a BFOQ is the goal of public safety, the employer must prove that the challenged practice does indeed effectuate that goal and that there is no acceptable alternative which would better advance it or equally advance it

1               with less discriminatory impact.

2       The Criswell Court made it clear that the BFOQ defense is an affirmative defense; the burden of 3       establishing its elements is on the defendant.

8.3.2 ADEA Defenses — Bona Fide Seniority System

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] has established by a preponderance of the evidence that [defendant] [describe employment action] because of [plaintiff's] age, then you must consider [defendant's] defense that it was applying the terms of a good faith seniority system. An employer can lawfully use a seniority system in making employment decisions unless the seniority rules were designed and used to discriminate against older workers. Put another way, if the seniority rules are legitimate and not designed to discriminate, then the rules are lawful and can be used to make employment decisions.

To establish the defense of a good faith seniority system, [defendant] must prove both of the following by a preponderance of the evidence:

First: That the seniority system used the length of service of employees, and not the age of the employees, as the primary basis for giving available job opportunities to its workers.

Second: That [defendant's] [challenged employment action] was consistent with its seniority system.

If you find that [defendant] has proved these two elements by a preponderance of the evidence, then you must find for [defendant].

Comment

The ADEA permits disparate treatment “to observe the terms of a bona fide seniority system that is not intended to evade the purposes of this Act, except that no such seniority system shall require or permit the involuntary retirement of any individual . . . because of the age of such individual.” 29 U.S.C. § 623(f)(2)(A). Thus the seniority system will be invalid if it is dependent on age rather than seniority. See Hazen Paper Co. v. Biggins, 507 U.S. 604, 616 (1993) (rejecting a claim of age discrimination where the challenged employment practice was the product of a bona fide seniority system). See also Dalton v. Mercer County Board of Educ., 887 F.2d 490, 492 (4th Cir.1989) (choosing an applicant with the most seniority pursuant to a bona fide statutory seniority system is not a violation of ADEA).

The Supreme Court has held that challenges to the effects of bona fide seniority systems may not be based upon assertions of disparate impact; rather, a plaintiff must prove intentional discrimination. See International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 352-56 (1977). See also Hiatt v. Union Pacific R.R., 65 F.3d 838, 842 (10th Cir.1995) (challenges of age discrimination to bona fide seniority systems must rest upon claim of disparate treatment rather than disparate impact).

8.3.3 ADEA Defenses — Waiver

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] has established by a preponderance of the evidence that [defendant] [describe employment action] because of [plaintiff's] age, then you must consider the defense alleged by [defendant] that [plaintiff] knowingly and voluntarily consented to a waiver of [plaintiff's] ADEA claims.

Federal law permits [plaintiff] to waive ADEA rights provided that, at a minimum, [defendant] proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the following safeguards are met:

1. The waiver is part of an agreement between [plaintiff] and [defendant] that is written in a way that is intended to be understood by [plaintiff] or by the average individual eligible to participate;
2. The waiver specifically refers to rights or claims arising out of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act;
3. [Plaintiff] did not waive rights or claims that may arise after the date the waiver was executed;
4. [Plaintiff] waived rights under the ADEA in exchange for something of value beyond that to which [he/she] was already entitled; and
5. [Plaintiff] was advised in writing to consult an attorney before executing the waiver agreement.

[In this case, [plaintiff] has presented evidence challenging the validity of this waiver. Specifically [describe plaintiff's evidence challenging waiver]. It is for you to determine whether or not the waiver was knowing and voluntary. In doing so, you must consider all the circumstances surrounding the signing of the waiver. [Defendant] has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that [plaintiff's] waiver of ADEA rights was knowing and voluntary. The fact that the agreement complies with the minimum standards of Federal law does not necessarily mean that the waiver was knowing and voluntary.]

Comment

The Older Workers Benefit Protection Act (OWBPA) permits workers to sign releases of ADEA claims, provided the waiver is knowing and voluntary and the minimum standards of the OWBPA are met. 29 U.S.C.A. § 626(f)(1). The proponent of the release has the burden to prove that the minimum statutory requirements for the release have been satisfied. See Ruehl v. Viacom, Inc., 500 F.3d 375, 381 (3d Cir. 2007) (waiver invalid where employer could not establish that the

1 employee was provided the necessary information required by the OWBPA: “Having the employee
2 say he was informed in writing — when he was not — does not satisfy the OWBPA requirements.”)
3 (emphasis in original). The minimum statutory requirements for a valid waiver are as follows:

4 (A) the waiver is part of an agreement between the individual and the employer that is 5 written in a manner calculated to be understood by such individual, or by the average
6 individual eligible to participate;

7
8 (B) the waiver specifically refers to rights or claims arising under [the ADEA];
9

10 (C) the individual does not waive rights or claims that may arise after the date the waiver is 11 executed;

12
13 (D) the individual waives rights or claims only in exchange for consideration in addition to 14 anything of value to which the individual already is entitled;

15
16 (E) the individual is advised in writing to consult an attorney prior to executing the 17 agreement.

18 29 U.S.C. § 626(f)(1). See Lewis and Norman, Employment Discrimination 456-57 (2d ed. 2004)
19 for a discussion of the statutory requirements.

20 The statutory factors are minimum requirements. See Wastak v. Lehigh Valley Health
21 Network, 342 F.3d 281, 295, n.8 (3d Cir. 2003) (noting that the OWBPA establishes “a floor, not 22 a ceiling”). Whether a waiver is knowing and voluntary is determined by a totality of the 23 circumstances. See Bennett v. Coors Brewing Co., 189 F.3d 1221, 1229 (10th Cir.1999) (noting that 24 the statutory factors governing a waiver under OWBPA are minimum requirements, and holding that 25 non-statutory factors such as fraud and duress may render an ADEA waiver not knowing and 26 voluntary); Griffin v. Kraft General Foods, Inc., 62 F.3d 368, 373-74 (11th Cir.1995) (validity of 27 waiver of ADEA claims must be determined under the totality of the circumstances). But if the 28 waiver agreement on its face meets the minimum statutory requirements of OWBPA, the issue of 29 whether or not the plaintiff has given a knowing and voluntary consent to a waiver of ADEA claims
30 will only reach the jury if the plaintiff has come forward with specific evidence sufficient to raise 31 a question as to the validity of the waiver. The court in Pierce v. Atchison Topeka & Santa Fe Ry., 32 110 F.3d 431, 438 (7th Cir.1997), explained why the plaintiff has a burden of production when 33 contending that a release conforming with the statute was not knowing and voluntary:

34 To place upon the employer the burden of demonstrating that an otherwise unambiguous
35 release of claims was not signed knowingly and voluntarily risks undermining the usefulness
36 of waivers by clouding them in uncertainty. This danger is compounded by the difficulty of 37 demonstrating that someone's actions were knowing and voluntary, an assumption about 38 human behavior which the law typically indulges as a matter of faith.
39

1           This line of reasoning has force. . . . [W]e believe that the concerns it reflects are 2 adequately addressed by placing the burden of production, rather than the burden of proof,
3 on the party who . . . seeks to invalidate a waiver of federal rights. Such a rule does not mean
4 that a claim that a release was not executed knowingly and voluntarily will necessarily reach
5 a jury. The plaintiff must come forward with specific evidence sufficient to raise a question
6 as to the validity of the release . . . . A bald assertion of misrepresentation by the employer,
7 standing alone, is legally insufficient. Moreover, certain factors, such as the participation of 8 an attorney in negotiating the release, will give rise to a presumption that the waiver was 9 knowing and voluntary. As for the difficulty of establishing that an employee did not act 10 knowingly and voluntarily, a burden which some have likened to "proving a negative," we 11 believe that this difficulty is minimized by requiring the employee to produce specific 12 evidence of factors that vitiated his consent to the release.
13

14           The court in Pierce emphasized—as does the instruction—that while the plaintiff has a 15 burden of production when the release conforms to minimum statutory requirements, it is the 16 defendant's burden to prove that the release was knowing and voluntary once the plaintiff's burden 17 of production is met.

18           An employer who obtains a waiver through a nonconforming release cannot defeat an ADEA 19 claim simply because the plaintiff did not tender back the consideration paid in exchange for the 20 waiver. Oubre v. Entergy Operations, Inc., 522 U.S. 422, 427-28 (1998).

8.4.1 ADEA Damages — General Compensatory Damages

No Instruction

Comment

General compensatory damages, such as for pain and suffering, are not recoverable in ADEA actions. Rogers v. Exxon Research and Engineering Co., 550 F.2d 834, 842 (3d Cir. 1977) (relying on legislative history tying recovery under the ADEA to that provided by the Fair Labor Standards Act, and not Title VII; holding that “damages for pain and suffering or emotional distress cannot properly be awarded in ADEA cases”), overruled on other grounds by Holliday v. Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, Inc., 584 F.2d 1221 (3d Cir. 1978) (en banc); Haskell v. Kaman Corp., 743 F.2d 113, 120-21 (2d Cir. 1984) (“plaintiffs are not entitled to recovery for emotional distress in ADEA actions”).

The ADEA mandates an award for back pay and liquidated damages, and permits an award for front pay. See Instructions 8.4.2 - 8.4.4 for instructions covering these awards.

8.4.2. ADEA Damages — Back Pay

Model

If you find that [defendant] intentionally discriminated against [plaintiff] in [describe employment action] [plaintiff], then you must determine the amount of damages that [defendant's] actions have caused [plaintiff]. [Plaintiff] has the burden of proving damages by a preponderance of the evidence.

You must award as actual damages an amount that reasonably compensates [plaintiff] for any lost wages and benefits, taking into consideration any increases in salary and benefits, including pension, that [plaintiff] would have received from [defendant] had [plaintiff] not been the subject of [defendant's] intentional discrimination.

Back pay damages, if any, apply from the time [plaintiff] was [describe adverse employment action] until the date of your verdict.

You must reduce any award by the amount of the expenses that [plaintiff] would have incurred in making those earnings.

If you award back pay, you are instructed to deduct from the back pay figure whatever wages [plaintiff] has obtained from other employment during this period. However, please note that you should not deduct social security benefits, unemployment compensation and pension benefits from an award of back pay.

[You are further instructed that [plaintiff] has a duty to mitigate [his/her] damages--that is [plaintiff] is required to make reasonable efforts under the circumstances to reduce [his/her] damages. It is [defendant's] burden to prove that [plaintiff] has failed to mitigate. So if [defendant] persuades you, by a preponderance of the evidence, that [plaintiff] failed to obtain substantially equivalent job opportunities that were reasonably available to [him/ her], you must reduce the award of damages by the amount of the wages that [plaintiff] reasonably would have earned if [he/she] had obtained those opportunities.]

[In assessing damages, you must not consider attorney fees or the costs of litigating this case. Attorney fees and costs, if relevant at all, are for the court and not the jury to determine. Therefore, attorney fees and costs should play no part in your calculation of any damages.]

[Add the following instruction if the employer claims “after-acquired evidence” of misconduct by the plaintiff:

[Defendant] contends that it would have made the same decision to [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of conduct that [defendant] discovered after it made the employment decision. Specifically, [defendant] claims that when it became aware of the [describe the after-discovered misconduct], [defendant] would have made the decision at that point had it not been made previously.

1           If [defendant] proves by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same
2 decision and would have [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of [describe after-
3 discovered evidence], you must limit any award of back pay to the date [defendant] would have 4 made the decision to [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] as a result of the after-acquired
5 information.]

6 7   Comment

8           Back pay awards are mandatory under the ADEA after a finding of discrimination; the 9 ADEA incorporates damages provisions from the Fair Labor Standards Act providing that back pay
10 “shall” be awarded. Accordingly, while back pay is an equitable remedy under some statutes (such 11 as Title VII), back pay is a damages remedy under the ADEA, and therefore the parties have a right 12 to a jury trial on questions of back pay. See Lorillard v. Pons, 434 U.S. 575, 584 (1978) (noting that 13 the ADEA incorporates the FLSA provision that employers “shall be liable” for amounts deemed 14 unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation, while under Title VII, the availability of backpay
15 is a matter of equitable discretion, and holding that in a private action under the ADEA a trial by jury
16 is available where sought by one of the parties); Anastasio v. Schering Corp., 838 F.2d 701 (3d Cir.
17 1988) (distinguishing the ADEA, where back pay is a mandatory element of damages, from the 18 discretionary back pay remedy in Title VII).

19           In McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publishing Co., 513 U.S. 352, 362 (1995), the Court held 20 that if an employer discharges an employee for a discriminatory reason, later-discovered evidence
21 that the employer could have used to discharge the employee for a legitimate reason does not 22 immunize the employer from liability. However, the employer in such a circumstance does not have 23 to offer reinstatement or front pay and only has to provide back pay “from the date of the unlawful 24 discharge to the date the new information was discovered.” 513 U.S. at 362. See also Mardell v.
25 Harleysville Life Ins. Co., 65 F.3d 1072, 1073 (3d Cir. 1995) (stating that “after-acquired evidence
26 may be used to limit the remedies available to a plaintiff where the employer can first establish that 27 the wrongdoing was of such severity that the employee in fact would have been terminated on those 28 grounds alone if the employer had known of it at the time of the discharge.”). Both McKennon and 29 Mardell observe that the defendant has the burden of showing that it would have made the same
30 employment decision when it became aware of the post-decision evidence of the employee’s 31 misconduct.

32           Under the ADEA, collateral benefits such as unemployment compensation, pension benefits
33 and social security benefits are not to be deducted from a back pay award. Berndt v. Kaiser
34 Aluminum & Chemical Sales, Inc., 789 F.2d 253 (3d Cir. 1986) (unemployment compensation is not 35 to be deducted from a back pay award in an ADEA action); Maxfield v. Sinclair Int’l, 766 F.2d 788
36 (3d Cir. 1985) (social security benefits cannot be offset as an award of backpay is a mandatory 37 element of damages under the ADEA). In contrast, courts have held that the ADEA does require 38 interim earnings to be deducted from back pay awards. Id. The instruction reflects these legal 39 standards.

1     Attorney Fees and Costs

2             There appears to be no uniform practice regarding the use of an instruction that warns the 3 jury against speculation on attorney fees and costs. In Collins v. Alco Parking Corp., 448 F.3d 652
4 (3d Cir. 2006), the district court gave the following instruction: “You are instructed that if plaintiff
5 wins on his claim, he may be entitled to an award of attorney fees and costs over and above what you
6 award as damages. It is my duty to decide whether to award attorney fees and costs, and if so, how 7 much. Therefore, attorney fees and costs should play no part in your calculation of any damages.”
8 Id. at 656-57. The Court of Appeals held that the plaintiff had not properly objected to the 9 instruction, and, reviewing for plain error, found none: “We need not and do not decide now whether
10 a district court commits error by informing a jury about the availability of attorney fees in an ADEA
11 case. Assuming arguendo that an error occurred, such error is not plain, for two reasons.” Id. at 657.
12 First, “it is not ‘obvious’ or ‘plain’ that an instruction directing the jury not to consider attorney fees”
13 is irrelevant or prejudicial; “it is at least arguable that a jury tasked with computing damages might,
14 absent information that the Court has discretion to award attorney fees at a later stage, seek to 15 compensate a sympathetic plaintiff for the expense of litigation.” Id. Second, it is implausible “that 16 the jury, in order to eliminate the chance that Collins might be awarded attorney fees, took the 17 disproportionate step of returning a verdict against him even though it believed he was the victim
18 of age discrimination, notwithstanding the District Court's clear instructions to the contrary.” Id.; 19 see also id. at 658 (distinguishing Fisher v. City of Memphis, 234 F.3d 312, 319 (6th Cir. 2000), and 20 Brooks v. Cook, 938 F.2d 1048, 1051 (9th Cir. 1991)).

8.4.3. ADEA Damages — Liquidated Damages

Model

If you find that [plaintiff] is entitled to recover damages for lost wages or benefits, you must determine if [defendant's] conduct was willful. If you find that [defendant] willfully violated the law, then you must award plaintiff double the amount of damages for lost wages and benefits that you have found. [Plaintiff] has the burden of proving willfulness by a preponderance of the evidence.

You must find [defendant's] violation of the ADEA to be willful if [defendant] knew or showed reckless disregard for whether the [challenged action] was prohibited by the law. To establish willfulness it is not enough to show that [defendant] acted negligently. If you find that [defendant] did not know, or knew only that the law was potentially applicable, and did not act in reckless disregard as to whether its conduct was prohibited by the law, then [defendant's] conduct was not willful and you cannot award double the amount of damages for lost wages and benefits.

Comment

Punitive damages are not available under the ADEA. Rogers v. Exxon Research and Engineering Co., 550 F.2d 834, 842 (3d Cir. 1977), overruled on other grounds by Holliday v. Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove, Inc., 584 F.2d 1221 (3d Cir. 1978) (en banc). 29 U.S.C. § 626(b) instead incorporates the liquidated damages provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C. § 216(b). The statute provides that doubling of damages is mandatory if there is a finding that the defendant willfully violated the law. Cf. Marrow v. Allstate Sec. & Investigative Services, Inc., 167 F.Supp.2d 838, 841 (E.D.Pa. 2001) (holding that punitive damages are available for claims of retaliation under the Equal Pay Act and Fair Labor Standards Act, and distinguishing ADEA actions, where punitive damages are not available for any claim).

In Trans World Airlines v. Thurston, 469 U.S. 111, 128 (1985), the Court held that willfulness must be found under the ADEA if the employer either knew or showed reckless disregard of the fact that its conduct was prohibited by the statute. The challenged action in Thurston was the company-wide implementation of a policy that was found to violate the ADEA. The Court held that a willful violation could not be found under the circumstances, as the company had sought advice of counsel in advance of the implementation of the policy, and was told that the policy would not violate the ADEA.

The Third Circuit held after Thurston that a stricter standard of willfulness must be applied to discrete acts (as opposed to policies) found to violate the ADEA. The court in Dreyer v. ARCO Chem. Co., 801 F.2d 651, 656-57 (1986) explained as follows:

1 Many cases since Thurston have extracted from it the dual "knew or showed reckless
2 disregard" test of willfulness to all claimed violations of the ADEA. However, there is a
3 distinction between cases where the employer action that is claimed to violate the ADEA
4 consists of adoption of a policy, as in Thurston, and cases where the employer action consists 5 of a decision directed at an individual, such as termination or demotion. The "knew or 6 reckless disregard" standard is particularly apt in the former situation . . . In such a situation, 7 it is meaningful to inquire whether the employer knew that the action was in violation of the 8 Act or whether it acted in reckless disregard of the prohibitions of the ADEA.

9 . . .

10 Where an employer makes a decision such as termination of an employee because of 11 age, the employer will or should have known that the conduct violated the Act. Nonetheless, 12 in order that the liquidated damages be based on evidence that does not merely duplicate that 13 needed for the compensatory damages, there must be some additional evidence of outrageous 14 conduct.

15 Four years after Dreyer, the Supreme Court decided Hazen Paper Co., v. Biggins, 507 U.S.
16 604 (1993). Unlike Thurston, Hazen Paper involved a discrete action against a single employee. In 17 analyzing the possibility of liquidated damages in such a case, the Hazen Court rejected any 18 requirement that the defendant's action must be "outrageous" before liquidated damages can be 19 imposed. It adhered to the Thurston "knowing/reckless disregard" test of willfulness for all acts of 20 intentional age discrimination. Addressing the concern that liquidated damages would be automatic
21 in all cases in which a discrete act was found to be intentional age discrimination, the Court declared
22 as follows:

23 It is not true that an employer who knowingly relies on age in reaching its decision invariably 24 commits a knowing or reckless violation of the ADEA. The ADEA is not an unqualified 25 prohibition on the use of age in employment decisions, but affords the employer a "bona fide 26 occupational qualification" defense, and exempts certain subject matters and persons, see,
27 e. g., § 623(f)(2) (exemption for bona fide seniority systems and employee benefit plans); §
28 631(c) (exemption for bona fide executives and high policymakers). If an employer
29 incorrectly but in good faith and nonrecklessly believes that the statute permits a particular 30 age-based decision, then liquidated damages should not be imposed.

31 Nor do we see how the instant case can be distinguished from Thurston . . . The only 32 distinction between Thurston and the case before us is the existence of formal discrimination.
33 Age entered into the employment decision there through a formal and publicized policy, and 34 not as an undisclosed factor motivating the employer on an ad hoc basis, which is what 35 respondent alleges occurred here. But surely an employer's reluctance to acknowledge its 36 reliance on the forbidden factor should not cut against imposing a penalty. It would be a 37 wholly circular and self-defeating interpretation of the ADEA to hold that, in cases where 38 an employer more likely knows its conduct to be illegal, knowledge alone does not suffice
39 for liquidated damages.

1           We therefore reaffirm that the Thurston definition of "willful" -- that the employer
2 either knew or showed reckless disregard for the matter of whether its conduct was 3 prohibited by the statute -- applies to all disparate treatment cases under the ADEA. Once
4 a "willful" violation has been shown, the employee need not additionally demonstrate that 5 the employer's conduct was outrageous, or provide direct evidence of the employer's 6 motivation, or prove that age was the predominant, rather than a determinative, factor in the 7 employment decision.

8           507 U.S. at 616. Accordingly, the instruction does not include any requirement that the defendant's
9 conduct must have been outrageous. See Starceski v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 54 F.3d 1089, 1099,
10 n2 (3d Cir. 1995) (noting that the Third Circuit's "outrageousness" requirement in Dreyer had been 11 effectively overruled by Hazen).

12           The amount of damages to be doubled under the ADEA liquidated damages provision does 13 not include front pay. Blum v. Witco Chem. Corp., 829 F.2d 367, 373 (3d Cir. 1987) (noting that a 14 front pay award "is the monetary equivalent of the equitable remedy of reinstatement" and therefore 15 is not part of the "wages" that are to be doubled under the terms of the statute).

16           Liquidated damages are of course not available in disparate impact cases, as liquidated
17 damages are premised on a knowing or reckless disregard of the law. In contrast, disparate impact 18 liability is not dependent on a knowing or intentional violation.

19           In Potence v. Hazleton Area School District, 357 F.3d 366 (3d Cir. 2004), the court held that 20 the ADEA authorizes the imposition of liquidated damages against government employers who 21 engage in willful age discrimination.

8.4.4. ADEA Damages — Front Pay

Model

You may determine and award separately a monetary amount equal to the present value of any future wages and benefits that [plaintiff] would reasonably have earned from [defendant] had [plaintiff] not [describe adverse employment action] for the period from the date of your verdict through a reasonable period of time in the future. From this figure you must subtract the amount of earnings and benefits [plaintiff] will receive from other employment during that time. [Plaintiff] has the burden of proving these damages by a preponderance of the evidence.

[If you find that [plaintiff] is entitled to recovery of future earnings from [defendant], then you must reduce any award by the amount of the expenses that [plaintiff] would have incurred in making those earnings.]

You must also reduce any award to its present value by considering the interest that [plaintiff] could earn on the amount of the award if [he/she] made a relatively risk-free investment. The reason you must make this reduction is because an award of an amount representing future loss of earnings is more valuable to [plaintiff] if [he/she] receives it today than if it were received at the time in the future when it would have been earned. It is more valuable because [plaintiff] can earn interest on it for the period of time between the date of the award and the date [he/she] would have earned the money. So you should decrease the amount of any award for loss of future earnings by the amount of interest that [plaintiff] can earn on that amount in the future.

[Add the following instruction if defendant claims “after-acquired evidence” of misconduct by the plaintiff:

[Defendant] contends that it would have made the same decision to [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of conduct that it discovered after it made the employment decision. Specifically, [defendant] claims that when it became aware of the [describe the after-discovered misconduct], it would have made the decision at that point had it not been made previously.

If [defendant] proves by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same decision and would have [describe employment decision] [plaintiff] because of [describe after-discovered evidence], then you may not award [plaintiff] any amount for wages that would have been received from [defendant] in the future.]

Comment

Front pay may be awarded if reinstatement is not possible. In Maxfield v. Sinclair Int’l, 766 F.2d 788, 795-96 (3d Cir. 1985), the court rejected the defendant’s argument that an award of front

1 pay is not permitted in an ADEA action, and discussed the role of a front pay award in the following
2 passage:

3           Although this court has not yet spoken on whether an award of future lost earnings
4 is precluded by the ADEA, . . . the line of cases we find most persuasive allows such an 5 award. As Judge Weinfeld wrote in Koyen v. Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, 560 F.
6 Supp. 1161, 1168 (S.D.N.Y. 1983), "To deny [authority to grant front pay] would defeat a
7 purpose of the Act to make a victim of discrimination 'whole' and to restore him to the 8 economic position he would have occupied but for the unlawful conduct of his employer."

9           Moreover, it is significant that whereas the FLSA has no provision for future
10 damages, when Congress enacted the ADEA it added the following provision to the remedies
11 taken from the FLSA:

12           In any action brought to enforce this chapter, the court shall have jurisdiction to grant
13 such legal or equitable relief as may be appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this 14 chapter, including without limitation judgments compelling employment, 15 reinstatement or promotion, or enforcing the liability for amounts deemed to be 16 unpaid minimum wages or overtime compensation under this section.

17           29 U.S.C. § 626(b). The inclusion of equitable relief strengthens the conclusion that 18 Congress intended victims of age discrimination to be made whole by restoring them to the 19 position they would have been in had the discrimination never occurred.

20           Front pay, an award for future earnings, is sometimes needed to achieve that purpose.
21 Ordinarily, an employee would be made whole by a backpay award coupled with an order
22 for reinstatement. Reinstatement is the preferred remedy to avoid future lost earnings, but 23 reinstatement may not be feasible in all cases. There may be no position available at the time
24 of judgment or the relationship between the parties may have been so damaged by animosity
25 that reinstatement is impracticable. In such circumstances, the remedial purpose of the 26 statute would be thwarted and plaintiff would suffer irreparable harm if front pay were not 27 available as an alternate remedy to reinstatement. Since reinstatement is an equitable remedy, 28 it is the district court that should decide whether reinstatement is feasible. Of course the 29 amount of damages available as front pay is a jury question. (Emphasis added).

30           Because front pay is essentially an equitable remedy in lieu of reinstatement, the plaintiff's
31 entitlement to front pay is an issue for the court, not the jury. But in Maxfield, supra, the court 32 declared that once the court finds that reinstatement is not feasible, it is for the jury to determine the 33 amount of "damages" available as front pay. Thus, it appears in the Third Circuit that the parties 34 have the right to a jury trial to determine the amount of front pay — though this is not the case in 35 actions brought under Title VII or Section 1981.

8.4.5 ADEA Damages — Nominal Damages

Model

If you return a verdict for [plaintiff], but [plaintiff] has failed to prove actual injury and therefore is not entitled to damages, then you must award nominal damages of $ 1.00.

A person whose federal rights were violated is entitled to a recognition of that violation, even if [he] suffered no compensable injury. Nominal damages (of $1.00) are designed to acknowledge the deprivation of a federal right, even where no compensable injury occurred.

However, if you find compensable injury, you must award damages for lost wages or benefits (as I instructed you), rather than nominal damages.

Comment

There is no Third Circuit case law on the availability of nominal damages in an ADEA case. But it appears that an award of nominal damages in an ADEA action might be justified in an extraordinary case, and so a pattern instruction is provided. The Eighth Circuit Committee Comment on a nominal damage instruction in an ADEA case opines that “[n]ominal damages normally are not appropriate in ADEA cases” and explains as follows:

Recoverable damages in ADEA cases normally are limited to lost wages and benefits and in most ADEA cases, it will be undisputed that the plaintiff has some actual damages. Although case law does not clearly authorize this remedy in age discrimination cases, a nominal damage instruction may be considered in appropriate cases, and Model Instruction 5.02B, supra, should be used. Most cases that allow nominal damages just assume they are permissible without much discussion of the issue. See e.g., Drez v. E.R. Squibb & Sons, Inc., 674 F. Supp. 1432, 1438 (D. Kan. 1987) (ADEA); Graefenhain v. Pabst Brewing Co., 670 F. Supp. 1415, 1416 (E.D. Wis. 1987) (ADEA).
